Reflective Questions for the Pathway: Inter-Relationships of Humans and Natural Environments

How can I encourage children to recognize that humans and the natural world are connected and mutually dependent on one another?

In what ways can I acknowledge children's small moments with ants, birds, or worms as meaningful relationships?

What practices do I cultivate that enrich and deepen children's relationship with place, land, and the creatures and forms within it?

What stories do children have of land, place, and the creatures and forms within it?

What opportunities do children have to care for their environments (e.g., cleaning, fixing, gardening, helping others)?

Environments and practices are created in which diverse abilities, cultures, languages, traditions, and heritages are celebrated and woven together. Educators have an important role to play in contributing to reconciliation by educating others about the impacts of colonialism and clarifying how Indigenous peoples have had so much taken from them – including their children.

All world relations: the understanding that humans, creatures, plants, trees, and non-living entities, forces, and landforms are all interconnected. Western ways of thinking create separation between all these and place humans as exceptional. The notion of all world relations is embedded in a common world's framework and suggests that all beings and non-living entities are entangled and dependent on one another.
